NOTES: *For one page reactions, write about how the material impacted you personally.

All seeking certification will be required to consent in writing to the Abide Network Policy (see next pages) and provide letters of recommendation from their pastor and two additional professional references. The Intake Supervisor will ask for these toward the end of the certification process. Please be advised that Abide Network retains discretion in whom to certify and platform on our website.

Abide Network Policy

The stated purpose of Abide is to offer affordable, accessible, biblically-grounded services to clients. Therefore, we ask that network participants assent to the following:

Counseling/Coaching Principles

The purpose of coaching, while practical in application, is ultimately to help clients come to know Jesus and to live in harmony with God's timeless life principles, stated clearly in His Word.

The goal of coaching is change, and change is a power dilemma. Therefore, helping connect clients to the Source of power is essential to their growth. This is facilitated by encouraging in-session prayer with clients, at the same time respecting their right to opt out.

Both the Bible and the writings of Ellen White provide rich resources for the ministry of coaching, both to enhance the effectiveness of the provider and to share with the one being helped.

Good lifestyle, such as plant-based diet, temperance, exercise, abstinence from alcohol and avoidance of narcotics, promote mental health. These principles should be followed and promoted with care, wisdom and a knowledge of the individual in their application.

The moral principles of the Bible, including but not limited to God's ideal of monogamous heterosexual marriage, are, in essence, descriptions of how life "works" such that they do not arbitrarily dictate, but graciously inform, His children. As such they should be upheld and encouraged.

While Abide grounds its approach in biblical principles, providers integrate current, well-researched scientific data and knowledge of mental health issues with their approach.

The ethical principles outlined by professional organizations such as the American Counseling Association should be respected where they do not conflict with Scripture or the law.

A coach's deportment with clients should be consummately gentle and winning versus forceful, pushy, or unkind. While we hold our beliefs very sacred, we never use the coaching forum to impose those beliefs upon clients. Clients reveal their most vulnerable selves to their coaches and the helping process, as such, should be regarded as holy ground.

Modesty and purity in dress and speech will lend a professional and spiritual tone to the coaching process. As the vast majority of our clientele are Adventists, please present, while in official Abide capacity, alignment with church dress standards. Make sure language is pure, avoiding the use of expletives or crass terms. This is especially essential given that many clients come with abuse and trauma histories and desire to feel safe from anything off-color or suggestive.

The secular mental health world is full of methods grounded in spiritualism and humanism. Biblical providers carefully vet out methods and use only what harmonizes with biblical truth.

Because of the power imbalance between client and provider, permission must be granted by the client for the provider to use session time to teach the Scriptures. Preaching and hardline evangelism are out of place in a coaching setting.

Because individuals are highly unique, one method does not fit all. As such, the modality should be fitted to the client rather than the client fitted to the modality. Yet the provider is a professional or paraprofessional with a knowledge of the healing process, so works with the client as an educated expert. A “toolbox” approach best balances these two realities. Abide Network’s own growing set of tools are provided free of charge on the website.

Providers should be careful to avoid taking high-risk (suicidal, homicidal, or psychotic) individuals as distance clients. Should the risk escalate after the coaching relationship is formed, coaches should help the client find suitable local inpatient or outpatient help as soon as possible. A call to the client’s local mental health crisis unit can help with this process.

For God to work and heal through an Abide mental health coach, he or she must be in recovery from personal addictions, harmful habits, and mental health issues. Should an Abide provider fall into active drug, sexual, or other addiction or other erratic or unhealthy behavior, he or she should ask to be removed from the network until such a time as they can confidently say they are clean, sober and in recovery. The fitness of the applicant to serve in the Abide Network is always at the discretion of the leadership of Abide, specifically the Director (Jennifer Schwirzer), the Educational Director (Jennifer Schwirzer) and the Intake Supervisor (Jeanine Goodwin).

Business Policies

Abide is a referral network, not a group practice. Each provider runs their own private practice, receiving referrals from Abide. Providers are free to accept other referrals or work other jobs.

Abide asks that for the referrals gained through Abide, the providers give 10 percent of session costs back to Abide for maintenance costs (website, advertising, etc.) throughout the duration of the therapeutic relationship.

Abide asks that the providers do their part to promote the network via social media and other avenues.

Abide asks that providers attend the monthly supervision session conference Zoom meeting, held the first Monday of each month, 8 PM ET Zoom room# 656 079 5097. Notifications are sent out before each meeting.

Because much of our work is across state lines, Abide is careful to use the term “coaching” or “mental health coaching” to describe what we do. Providers are responsible for keeping up to date on state regulations and are asked to update other Abide providers on any known changes to those regulations.

Mission Statement

Abide Network aims to provide biblically-grounded, scientifically informed, wholistic, affordable, accessible mental health coaching and education to any and all who would benefit from it.
